28. The Congressional Budget Office last week said that President Obama’s budget would produce 9.3 trillion dollars in deficits over the next 10 years. Knowing this should which of the two following statements comes closer to your view? (ROTATE)

- 1. These huge deficits reflect too much increased spending and are putting the country’s future at serious risk. We need to significantly reduce the amount of increased government spending being proposed, and get the economy back on track first. 52
OR
- 2. These large deficits reflect pessimistic economic federal tax revenue projections, and when the stimulus package kicks in, the economy will grow and the amount of tax revenues will increase and the deficit will go down, allowing the country to fund critical health care, education, and climate change initiatives. 44
- 3. DK/Refused (DO NOT READ) 5

29. Which statement do you agree with more? (ROTATE)

- 1. Government should have regulatory mechanisms regarding bonuses and salaries because of the tax dollars being spent to prop up financial institutions 48
- 2. Government is going too far injecting itself into the private sector, and we’re heading down a slippery slope where government bureaucrats are making decisions about how people run their businesses. 46
